IF I WERE KING.

If I were king for half a bour, What lots of things I'd do! I'd tear from false men all the power, And give it to the true. No starving voices then should cry, No poverty should lower About the poor man's home, if I

Were king for half an hour. And all should have enough of work, And yet enough of play;
I'd teach the idlers not to shirk—
But in some pleasant way.
No child should look all wistfully At toy, at sweet, or flower;

I'd treat the little ones, if I Were king for half an hour. I'd have no prisoners in the land— All people should be good; With no temptations to withstand, They truly might and could.

We'd have no armies, by the way, Nor ships the sea to acour; The world would be at peace if I Were king for half an hour. All should be happy, free, and gay, By act of parliament;

By general consent.

No eye should weep, no breast should sig No stricken head should cower, No heart should ache at all, if I Were king for half an hour And in the end, the folks would tire Of me and my reforms; ..../ No more calm weather would admire—

Would almost sigh for storms. And last a guillotine so high Above the crowd would tower-They'd cut my head off sure, if I Were king for half an hour. WITTY REMARKS OF ARTEM

The last picture I have to show you represents Mr. Brigham Young in the bosom of his family. His family in the bosom of his family. His family is large and the olive branches around his table are in a very tangled condition. He is more a father than any man I know of. When at home—as you see him here—he ought to be rich; but in the ocean cemetery the largest of all cemeteries, and its sumberers repose without monuments. All other graveyards, in all lands, show some distinction between the great and small, the poor and the composed of believers in many creeds, as you see him here—he ought to be
